ing questions and answers to corresponlooks nicely, prettily, charmingly, sweetly, badly?—to say I feel wretchedly?

Answer.—It is not correct to use the adverb in the expressions alluded to. A thing may look "nice, pretty," and so on, or you may feel "wretched." The ly QUESTION.—Is it proper to use the plural form of the verb be when its nomnative is a singular pronoun?

Answer.—When the verb expresses action you use the adverb, because it describes the manner of that action—as he writes handsomely, she reads fluently, &c. When the verb is one simply expressing a state of existence, (and not something done,) you use the adjective— as she is pretty; he looks charming; they feel comfortable.

Question .- Should a lady see a gentleman visitor to the street door, or would it be impolite of her not to do it? ANSWER .- She might accompany him the first time, if a stranger, to teach him how to get out. After that, to accompany him to the front door is understood to express a more than usual regard for the visit or, and there is no want of politeness in omitting it.

QUESTION.—I have been acquainted with a young lady about a year, and she always addresses me as Mr. —. She has other gentlemen friends, though, with whom she has been acquainted but with whom she has been acquainted but a short time, but always accosts them as Tom, Dick or Harry, &c. As I admire the young lady a little, I would like to know whether these proceedings are fas vorable or otherwise?"

Answer.—We should incline to think that the lady respects you too much to be as free with you as she is with those she accost- so familiarly, and respect is a solid, and ought to be the indispensable, foundation for a sincere affection. Love is a capricious thing, however, and is not always to be judged by inflexible rules. The reserve with which the lady addresses you may possibly arise from a peculiar coldness she feels towards you. Of that you are the best judge. One thing is very certain, though; she does not regard you with indifference. She either likes or dislikes your company, and that feeling inspires the ceremoni-Which feeling it ousness she employs. is, surely you ought to be able to infer from other little corroborating circumstances incident to your mutual interchange of social courtesies.
